doctor

I help victims of family violence by examining and documenting their injuries. Just listening to them also provides some solace in their times of need. The Subordinate Courts have created the opportunity for me and other like-minded doctors to contribute our services for the benefit of the community. This collaboration is a step in the right direction.

It has been a privilege working with the Family Court in the area of mediation. Emotions often run high in the midst of disputes. My role is to create a conducive and impartial atmosphere so that parties can resolve their disputes peaceably.

Programme, Juvenile Justice Division

Through the peer mediation programme, we have learned much about getting along with others peaceably, and helping our peers do the same. We are also more familiar with our justice system. We are pleased to contribute our services.

The justice system belongs to the community, and exists to serve it. The Subordinate Courts, as part of the Judiciary, leads the justice system. Nevertheless, a vibrant justice system demands the care and participation of people from all walks of life.
